

Net Expense Ratio Reductions Announced for Appleseed Fund Investor, Institutional Shares

CHICAGO, 2014 –Appleseed Fund (NASDAQ: APPLX, APPIX), has announced expense-ratio reductions for its Investor and Institutional share classes, effective Oct. 1, 2014.

“As we begin a new fiscal year Oct. 1, we will be trimming four basis points off Appleseed Fund Investor shares, resulting in a 1.20% net expense ratio. At the same time, we will be lowering the net expense ratio on Institutional shares by four basis points, to 0.95%,” explained Joshua Strauss, Appleseed Fund portfolio manager.

Strauss credited the reductions to the Fund’s growth and resulting economies of scale. “Since we started Appleseed Fund in 2006, its size has grown considerably. As a result, we have generated savings from cost efficiencies, and we are passing some of these savings along to our investors,” he said.

In 2011, Pekin Singer Strauss, advisor to Appleseed Fund, launched an Appleseed Fund Institutional share class (APPIX) with a 0.25% lower net expense ratio than the Investor shares (APPLX).

“As value investors, we seek out well-managed, highly competitive businesses that deliver enduring value for their investors. We hold ourselves to the same standards,” said Strauss. “Our goal since launching the Fund has been to create a compelling financial product for investors. Through the years, we have made significant investments in our research and in our operational and compliance infrastructure. We are pleased to be reducing a portion of the Fund’s net investment expense.”
